College Credit Recommendation Service

about ACE

The American Council on Education (ACE) is the major coordinating body for colleges and universities throughout the country, providing leadership and a unifying voice on key higher education issues. ACE works to influence public policy through advocacy, research and program initiatives.

The American Council on Education's College Credit Recommendation Service is a national program that evaluates education and training programs offered by organizations and recommends their courses for college credit.

Thomas Edison State College is an affiliate office for the ACE College Credit Recommendation Service.

Why Your Organization Should Consider ACE

Each year, the ACE College Credit Recommendation Service helps employees validate the skills they need to boost performance and enhance job satisfaction, helps organization's improve the skill and education level of their workforce and helps employers save millions of tuition assistance dollars.

The service can assess your organization's training programs to determine whether they can successfully be recommended for college credit. It is a win-win for all involved.

- ▶ Employers and training providers earn national recognition for their training programs while saving tuition assistance dollars
- ▶ Adult learners gain greater access to colleges and universities
- ▶ Colleges and universities nationwide accept colleges credit recommendations made by the ACE College Credit Recommendation Service. College acceptance policies and the applicability of credits toward particular degree programs vary at each institution.
- ▶ Partnership opportunity with colleges and universities

Evaluating a Training Program for College Credit

- ▶ Evaluations are conducted at the location where the courses are offered.

- ▶ Courses are evaluated by a team of college professors who are content area experts.

- ▶ Content areas are evaluated based on equivalency to a college course.

- ▶ Materials evaluated include: course syllabus, textbooks, exams, projects, assignments and readings.

- ▶ Evaluations include discussions with administrative staff, course developers, instructors and students.

- ▶ Evaluation results appear on the online ACE National Guide to College Credit for Workforce Training:
<http://www.acenet.edu/nationalguide>

- ▶ ACE transcripts are provided to students who complete ACE evaluated courses.
